Oeufware Announces the World's First Baking Pan Designed for Deviled Eggs to Debut at the Inspired Home Show

St. Petersburg, FL (March 6, 2026) – Oeufware, an innovative new cookware startup, is set to make its debut at the Inspired Home Show in Chicago, March 10–12, 2026.

Oeufware will unveil the Deviled Egg Baking Pan — the world's first cookware dedicated entirely to making deviled eggs. The patent-pending design allows raw egg whites to be divided into equal portions and baked to achieve the same familiar appearance as a traditionally boiled egg. This pan empowers home cooks and culinary professionals alike to prepare deviled eggs without boiling, peeling, or scooping. Simply crack a raw egg, separate the white and yolk into the pan's dedicated chambers, and bake. The result is a dramatically faster, cleaner, and more consistent process that also enables on-demand preparation.

The idea was born out of a real kitchen frustration. "I needed to make a large batch of deviled eggs and quickly realized how time-consuming the traditional method really is," said Lauren, Founder of Oeufware. "I discovered that many people were already baking eggs in muffin pans, but there was nothing designed specifically for deviled eggs. I set out to change that."

After extensive prototyping, testing, and refinement, Oeufware is proud to bring its solution to market. It transforms one of America's most beloved dishes from a labor-intensive chore into an effortless, repeatable process.

Oeufware will be located in the Inventor's Corner section, South Building, Booth #IC27.
